Archetypes of Knowing

by Vaid Atwal

This lecture introduces a new inquiry into how meaning is formed—not as interpretation, but as a pre-perceptual blueprint that silently shapes perception, cognition, and psychological experience. Instead of presenting a theory, method, or therapeutic model, it explores the underlying grammar of meaning: the structures through which knowing becomes possible. By examining the architecture behind synthesis, the session offers a fresh perspective on the meaning of meaning and its role in how the mind organizes reality. The intention is to open a contemplative yet rigorous space for clinicians and thinkers to re-examine the foundations of understanding itself.
